

ALTAR TO THE EARTH

by

The Devil

Upstate New York, 1757. The French and Indian war rages.

The Huron dedicate a burial ground in the Adirondacks for their dead.

1950. A construction crew pours concrete over the burial ground for the construction of a country club.

Decades pass.

2013. A groundskeeper interviews for a position with the club. He would be living on the grounds. He gets the job.

Indian culturalists/patriots cast curses and spells over the site.

Spirits haunt the groundskeeper. Dead Indians appear randomly at the site, on the course, in the rooms, etc. No one else sees them because they only come out at night.

Topiary come alive and attack the groundskeeper.

The groundskeeper goes insane and kills a bunch of club members, then himself.

A year later, a wedding is held at the site. Spirits haunt the reception and guests die from telekinetic objects moved by the ghost of the groundskeeper.
